Overview and Course Description

The goal of the 71st Annual Roy A. Bowers Pharmaceutical Conference, “Reducing Health Disparities: Achieving Health Equity, Affordability, and Access in Public Health,” is to provide a multi-stakeholder platform to address health care challenges, identify potential solutions, and to engage members of the interprofessional healthcare team and key leaders within the healthcare system to identify actionable strategies to improve health outcomes and ensure the provision of high-quality healthcare. Leaders, providers, and trainees from the interprofessional healthcare team are encouraged to attend, representing academia, the pharmaceutical industry, health systems, ambulatory practice, population management, state legislatures, and health care policy. Speakers will engage and share best practices and perspectives on navigating and providing care within a complex healthcare system with a focus on health disparities, healthcare management, and care delivery models. This year’s conference will highlight the equity, affordability, and access in public health and its influence on population health, specialty trends, key government programs, and implementation of lasting system change to reduce health disparities from the local to national level.
